Money Politics, Clientelism and Vote Buying Workshop

Sanur Beach Hotel
Bali, Indonesia
12-13 December 2011

PROFILE OF PARTICIPANTS

Ed Aspinall is a Senior Fellow on Indonesian Politics and Head of the Department of Political and Social Change at the School of International, Political and Strategic Studies of the Australian National University. His interest in the study of politics, especially Southeast Asian politics, began when he lived in Malang, East Java, as a teenager. After studying Indonesian language and politics at high school and university, he completed his PhD in the Department of Political and Social Change in 2000 on the topic of opposition movements and democratisation in Indonesia. After that, he worked on a range of topics related to Indonesian democratisation and civil society, and especially concerning the separatist conflict in Aceh. His current research interests include ongoing research on Indonesian national politics and democratisation, as well as a comparative project on peace processes in the Asia-Pacific. He is also starting systematic research on the role of ethnicity in everyday politics in Indonesia. He teaches on ethnic conflict and internal security in Asia.

Ketut Erawan is the Executive Director of the Institute for Peace and Democracy (IPD) at the University of Udayana, Bali. He is a member of the Steering Committee for the Australia and Indonesia Governance Research Partnership. In 2008-2009, he served as the Special Advisor to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and in 2005-2009, he was the Director of the Graduate Program of Political Science at Gadjah Mada University. He also worked as a consultant for the World Bank, World Bank Institute, UNDP and various Indonesian agencies. He finished his bachelor’s degree from Gadjah Mada University, his master’s degree in Political Science from Ohio State University, and his PhD in Political Science from Northern Illinois University as a Fulbright scholar.

Jon Fraenkel is a Senior Research Fellow in the State, Society and Governance in Melanesia Program in the College of Asia and the Pacific at the Australian National University. He formerly worked at the University of the South Pacific in Fiji from 1995-2007. He is author of The Manipulation of Custom: From Uprising to Intervention in the Solomon Islands (Victoria University Press & Pandanus Books, 2004) and recently co-edited The 2006 Military Takeover in Fiji: A Coup to End All Coups? (ANU EPress, 2009). His current research work focuses on contemporary Pacific politics, economic history of Oceania, electoral systems in Fiji, Tonga, Papua New Guinea and Nauru and women’s representation in the Pacific Islands. He is The Economist’s Pacific Island correspondent and regularly covers contemporary Pacific issues for other international media outlets.
Sandra Hamid is Senior Director for Programs at the Asia Foundation in Jakarta. She provides leadership in programmatic development and implementation of cross-cutting nation-wide programs in the fields of governance and elections, law and gender, and most recently on knowledge institutions and public policy. She is a cultural anthropologist and a development specialist with strong interest in political participation and civic education. She has served as the Foundation's Election program manager in the 1999 and 2004 elections, worked closely with and provided technical assistance to the Foundation's grantees in program development and implementation. Since then she has run the Foundation’s Aceh Programs and managed the implementation of programs in the areas of governance, health care and communications. She has also contributed to the development of successful Foundation programs on pluralism, and women’s political participation, good governance. She holds a Ph.D. in Cultural Anthropology from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, and a Bachelor of Arts from the University of Indonesia in Business Administration. She was a Fulbright scholar over 1992-1994 and has worked in Indonesia, East Timor, and United States for organizations including the U.S. State Department, the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. She also has extensive political experience, having served in the Indonesian National Mandate Party – one of the first political parties formed immediately after Suharto’s downfall. She currently serves as a board member of Yayasan Pendidikan Seni Nusantara, an NGO dedicated to promoting education on pluralism through intervention in school curricula.

Allen Hicken is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Michigan. His research interests are in party systems, political institutions, electoral and constitutional reforms, and governance issues. He holds a PhD in Political Science from the University of California San Diego, a master’s degree in International Affairs from Columbia University and a bachelor’s degree in International Relations/Asian Studies (summa cum laude) from Brigham Young University.

Ronald Holmes is Assistant Professor of Political Science and Director for Institutional Research and Planning at the De La Salle University-Manila. He is also currently a Visiting Research Fellow at the Institute of Developing Economies in Japan; President of Pulse Asia, Inc; and, Chair of the Technical Committee in Political Science, Commission on Higher Education. He also served as Executive Vice President of De La Salle-Santiago Zobel School in Alabang (1999-2000 and 2004-2008) and Executive Vice President of De La Salle College of Saint Benilde (2000-04). He holds a bachelor’s degree (double major) in History-Political Science from De La Salle University, and a master’s degree in Political Science from the University of the Philippines Diliman. He is currently pursuing a PhD in Development Studies at De La Salle University.

Paul Hutchcroft is Director of the School of International, Political and Strategic Studies at the Australian National University (ANU). His interests in Southeast Asian politics can be traced to 1980-81, when he first lived in the Philippines and witnessed mounting opposition to the rule of Ferdinand Marcos. This eventually led him into Southeast Asian studies at Yale University, where he completed an MA in International Relations and a PhD in Political Science. He finished his dissertation while at the Harvard Academy for International and Area Studies, and proceeded to fifteen years of service on the faculty of the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He joined the ANU in August 2008. His research interests include comparative politics and Southeast Asian politics, state formation and territorial politics, the politics of patronage, political reform and democratic quality, state-society relations, structures of governance, and corruption.
Noppadon Kannika is Director of Academic Network for Community Happiness Observation and Research (ANCHOR) at ABAC Poll Research Center, Assumption University in Thailand. He earned his MS in Survey Methodology from the University of Michigan – Ann Arbor and certificates in Survey Design from JPSP at the University of Maryland. He attended some MPA courses at Cornell, and received Georgetown University’s offer of admissions to study Executive Master of Public Management in summer 2012. His research interests focus on the development of survey data quality in ASEAN countries; estimation of sampling errors for multi-stage sampling; and public agenda, polling, and policy alternatives. His job is to know what you think.

Prajak Kongkirati is a Lecturer at the Political Science Department of Thammasat University, Thailand, and serves on the executive board of the Foundation for the Promotion of Social Science and Humanities textbooks Project, Peace Information Center, and the editorial board of the Journal of Political Science of Thammasat University. He is a public commentator and expert on Thai politics, social movement and political violence. He is the author of award-winning And then the Movement Emerged: Cultural Politics of Thai Students and Intellectuals Movements before the October 14 Uprising (Thammasat University Press, 2005), “Academic Landscape of Political Violence: Arguments and Findings from 1970s-2008” in Hiding/Seeking Violence, edited by Chaiwat Satha-Anand (Matichon 2010), Voting with no Bloodshed: Elections and Violence in the 2011 General Election in Thailand (Kobfai, forthcoming), and editor of A Changing Landscape of Thai Electoral Politics and Local Studies (Fa Diew Kan, forthcoming). Currently, he is a PhD candidate at the Department of Political and Social Change of the Australian National University. His study has been supported by an Australian Leadership Award of AusAID.

Kian Ming Ong obtained his PhD in Political Science from Duke University, where he was a Fulbright Scholar. He is currently pioneering a Masters in Public Policy course at the Faculty of Economics and Policy Science (FEPS) at UCSI University, Malaysia. He is also a consultant with the UCSI Blue Ocean Strategy Regional Center (BOSRC) and is also a director in OKM Consulting, a political consulting firm. Before leaving to pursue his PhD in the United States, he worked as a consultant with the Boston Consulting Group (BCG) in the KL office and as a policy analyst with two politically linked think thanks, the Institute of Strategic Analysis and Policy Research (INSAP) and the Socio-Economic Development and Research (SEDAR) Institute. He holds a Bsc in Economics from the London School of Economics (LSE) and an MPhil in Economics from the University of Cambridge. He writes regularly for Malaysiakini.com and The Edge Daily. He completed his O levels and A levels in Raffles Institution and Raffles Junior College in Singapore under the ASEAN scholarship.

Burhanuddin Muhtadi is Researcher at the Indonesian Survey Institute, Lecturer in Political Science at the Faculty of Political and Social Science Syarif Hidayatullah State Islamic University in Jakarta, and Lecturer in Voting Behaviour at the Graduate School of Paramadina. He holds a master’s degree in Indonesian politics from the Australian National University (2008) which was supported by an Australian Development Scholarship of AusAID.
Stephen Sherlock is Director of the Centre for Democratic Institutions at the Crawford School of Economics and Government of the Australian National University since June 2010. He holds a PhD and MA in South and Southeast Asian history and politics from the University of Sydney. His interests are in Southeast Asian politics and history, especially the political economy of development, political parties, electoral systems and parliaments in Indonesia. He has published extensively on Indonesian legislatures, electoral and political affairs and governance. He entered the Australian Agency for International Development (AusAID) as a graduate recruit in 1990, after having taught Asian Studies on a part-time basis while completing post-graduate studies. He subsequently joined the parliamentary service and worked for 11 years as an analyst on Indonesia, East Timor and the Pacific, providing research, analysis and policy advice to MPs and parliamentary committees and producing publications on political developments in the region. He left the parliament in 2001 to become an independent consultant to the World Bank, United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Asian Development Bank (ADB), AusAID, National Democratic Institute (NDI) and the Friedrich Naumann Stiftung (FNS).

Julio Teehankee is Chair and Associate Professor of the International Studies Department at De La Salle University, Manila (DLSU-M). Currently, he is also the holder of the John Gokongwei Chair in Asian Studies at DLSU-M. He completed both his doctorate degree in Development Studies (with distinction) and his bachelor’s degree major in Political Science from DLSU-M. He earned his master’s degree in Political Science from the University of the Philippines. He was a Japan Foundation fellow at the Graduate School of Law and Politics, the University of Tokyo, Japan from September 2007 to June 2008; a visiting fellow at the Japan Institute for International Affairs in 2002; a Sumitomo Foundation research grantee at the Waseda Institute of Asia Pacific Studies, Waseda University in 2000; a Fulbright American Studies Fellow at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale in 2000; and, a Japan Foundation faculty development grantee at Ibaraki University, Japan from July 1995 to July 1996. He previously served as chair of the Political Science Department for four terms between 1994 and 2007. Recently, he was elected president of the Asian Political and International Studies Association (APISA). He has also served as board member and secretary of the Philippine Political Science Association (PPSA). He specializes in the comparative analysis of politics and development in East and Southeast Asia, with particular focus on elections, party politics, democratization and governance.

Meredith Weiss is Associate Professor at the Department of Political Science at the University at Albany, State University of New York. Her research interest is in the field of comparative politics, focusing on Southeast Asia, especially Malaysia, Singapore, and Indonesia. Thematically, she explores processes and patterns of political development and mobilization, including such dimensions as nationalism and ethnicity, gender and sexuality, Islamism, and coalition-building in both civil society and electoral politics. She chairs the Southeast Asia Council of the Association for Asian Studies (AAS) and is on the AAS Board of Directors. She is also Treasurer of the New Political Science section of the American Political Science Association (APSA) and is past chair of the APSA’s LGBT Caucus. She has testified for the House Committee on International Relations (Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific), given briefings for the US Trade Representative and State Department, and served as a State Department lecturer in Malaysia. She came to the University at Albany after three years at the East-West Center in Washington, DC. Prior to that, she was on the faculty at DePaul University. She has held visiting fellowships also at the University of Sydney, Universiti Malaya, Georgetown University, and the Australian National University, and has been the recipient of Fulbright, SSRC, and other grants. She received her PhD and MA degrees from Yale University.
J. Danang Widoyoko is the Coordinator of Indonesia Corruption Watch (ICW), a well-known and respected anti-corruption NGO in Indonesia. With ICW, he has been involved in numerous investigative reporting on various corruption cases, particularly corruption in government budget, state-owned enterprises, public services, oil and extractive industries and forestry. ICW currently is doing in depth research and investigative reporting on corruption in the local elections. He has also been appointed as the Chairperson of the Board of INFID (International NGO Forum on Indonesia Development), an Indonesian coalition of NGOs which focuses on monitoring the impact of development and foreign debt. Prior to joining ICW, Danang was worked for Percik Foundation and Geni Foundation based at Salatiga. He graduated with a degree in Electronics Engineering from Satya Wacana Christian University.