PNG PARLIAMENTARIANS AT ANU FOR DIALOGUE

Six Papua New Guinean MPs visited the ANU on 15 October to participate in a Dialogue on contemporary issues in PNG and Australia. The Parliamentarians were in Australia at the invitation of the SSGM program at the ANU. Roland Rich was invited to participate in the dialogue.

The dialogue highlighted the continuing difficulties being faced by PNG and the enormous challenge this posed for the elected leaders. The decay in infrastructure was one indication that was easily visible. The decay in governance infrastructure was less visible but nevertheless just as important. There were a number of issues conspiring to complicate any reform in governance. The economic base was shrinking with the growing loss of interest by Australian mining companies. Health problems were becoming acute in relation to malaria and HIV/AIDS. Population growth was around 3% and there were few jobs for urban youth.

The PNG participants highlighted the importance of the relationship with Australia. There were high expectations of what the aid program could deliver with a number of parliamentarians speaking about the need for roads including the need to fix the Western Highway. Yet AusAID was already spending $A50m a year on roads, but this was in no way matched by maintenance funds from the PNG government. One parliamentarian explained how all the representatives from his province had pooled their development funds to match AusAID funds for infrastructure. This was an example of using development funds for development rather than for electioneering.

The PNG parliamentarians maintained their enthusiasm and commitment but also understood the difficulties of gaining re-election. The changes in the political system such as the political integrity legislation and the preferential voting system that would be used in 2007 held out some prospects for more stability and better governance. There was considerable interest in Senator Cook’s presentation on the report of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee on relations with the Pacific with particular attention on the recommendation for a review of visa arrangements to allow more Melanesians to undertake short-term work in Australia.
